COURSE DESCRIPTION

Taking inspiration from the Himalayan environment and contextualizing religious experience in the mountains, this course will draw on broad ideas about the relationship between religion and ecology to understand how belief systems and ritual practices are shaped by and shape environmental consciousness. In the philosophical traditions of southern Asia, the Himalaya represent purity, transcendence, and deep introspection associated with ascetic ideals of ethical self-perfection. In the structure of the ritual activities of Hinduism and Tibetan Buddhism, the mountains are a place of pilgrimage where individuals, families and whole communities go in order to experience divinity. As the designation in Sanskrit indicates the Himalaya are considered to be the “home of the gods,” and the intimacy of entering into the domestic space of this divine wilderness produces the coordinates of a profoundly moral and ethical life deeply embedded in the natural environment.

The Himalayas have inspired more religious thought, given rise to more forms of religious practice and are more distinctively featured in a spectrum of epic religious literature, than almost any other geographic region in the world, with the possible exception of a small parcel of relatively dry hilly ground between Jerusalem and Mecca. In any case, Siddhartha Gautham was born and taught in the shadow of the lower Himalayas, where Buddhism emerged in the 4th century BCE. Many specific mountains, lakes and rivers, as well as the broader geography of the Himalayas – most notably sacred rivers – define the landscape of Hindu mythology, pilgrimage and ritual. The practice of yoga as a metaphysical philosophy is intimately linked to the idea of mystical Himalayan masters. The western watershed of the Punjab, including the eponymous five rivers – Indus, Jhelum, Chenab, Ravi and Sutlej – is the heartland of Sikh cultural and religious identity. In addition to being a center of medieval Hindu literary learning, Kashmir and the western Himalayas, extending through the Hindu Kush, have defined routes of exchange, communication, conversion and confrontation between Greeks, Persians, Buddhist monks, and Mongol armies. More recently – in terms of centuries – Tibetan Buddhism has emerged out of a history of development in Lhasa – relocated to McLeod Ganj in the early 1960s -- that combines elements of Tantra from the southeastern Brahmaputra region with transmutations of Buddhism that have taken shape in Greater China. Although not inspired by the Himalayas per se, Islam in South Asia has been shaped by geography and the environment in specific ways, and the development of a particular interpretation of the Koran in a small center of learning in the town of Deoband – close to where the epic battle of the Bhagavad Gita is said to have been waged in Kurukshetra – implicates the geography and geopolitics of the Himalayas in the emergence of reform oriented, orthodox Islam.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES AND OUTCOMES

There are three interrelated learning objectives:

1. To develop an appreciation for the unique religious and philosophical significance of the Himalayas in the cross-cultural context of religious diversity in South Asia and Tibet.
2. To develop an understanding of the relationship between mythology, geology and an ethical life.
3. To develop a critical perspective on the way in which religion, ecology and social life come together in human experience.

There are three learning outcomes. After taking the course

1. students will develop cross-cultural awareness about how and why the Himalaya are understood to be “home of the gods”, source of insight on morality and ethical self-reflection, and a font of natural resources that sustain life in South Asia and Tibet.
2. students will be able to explain the interrelationship between religious institutions and practice, mythology and specific features of the Himalayan environment.
3. students will develop skills to produce multi-media learning modules based on a critical understanding of religion, philosophical thought and ecology in the Himalayas

OFFICE HOURS

Given that students and the instructor will be in different time zones, office hours will be scheduled on an ad hoc basis by appointment. Please contact the instructor via email to make the necessary arrangements for a zoom meeting.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS AND FORMAT

The course is delivered in a hybrid synchronous/asynchronous mode. All students meet together with the instructor for one hour per week via zoom meetings: Tuesday, 6 – 7pm EST.

Synchronous: Weekly synchronous meetings provide a framework for structured seminar discussion led by the instructor and student working groups. Weekly meetings build on curated multi-media modules developed by the instructor. Each week students engage with a new module after completing reading assignments that highlight specific topics, issues, problems and questions. After applying what has been learned through reading and to the mediated material in each module students will reflect on, analyze and interpret their virtual experiences through structured discussion and debate.

Asynchronous: Each week students will spend 1.5 self-scheduled hours working through a pre-recorded, online, multi-media module focused thematically on a specific topic, issue, question or problem. Modules are prepared by the instructor using content that is uniquely produced for the course incorporating a wealth of material that is available online. Each module contains recorded, onsite guided tours, commentaries, analyses and interpretations that build on reading assignments by taking students on virtual trips to specific locations in the mountains.

Canvas Course Interface: The course is delivered by the University of Pittsburgh’s Canvas Learning Management System. Synchronous class meetings are scheduled and accessed via zoom meetings on the Canvas interface. The class syllabus and all other material including recorded modules are posted under the appropriate tab on the Canvas course page menu. All reading assignments that are not from the required texts (see above) are available as pdf copies. These are posted along with each module, as appropriate.

ASSIGNMENTS:

There are two integrated assignments that will be scored, an essay and a multi-media module.

Essay (40 points): Write a 3000-word essay using at least ten academic sources. The essay must be on a question or problem that is relevant to the course. The essay will provide the academic foundation for the multi-media module project. (Due Week 10)

Multi-Media Module (40 points): Using the multi-media modules produced for this course as models and as examples of how media can be combined, collect resources and produce one of your own! The module you produce should build on the intellectual and academic foundation of the essay. (Due Week 14)

Attendance and Participation: (20 points)

Total: 100 points
